DISCUSSION QUESTIONS AND ANSWER SKETCHES

Each chapter of Policy Analysis: Concepts and Practice, 2nd Edition, ends with discussion questions. The questions are provided as a basis for learners' assignments or class discussion. These pages provide answer sketches to assist learners in their work.

Chapter 1

1. Think back to the research paper you have written for undergraduate courses. In what ways are your papers similar to academic literature or the simple policy analysis of the text, which policy? In what ways do your papers differ?

likely similarities:

1. Research papers and the policy analysis both generally draw on scholarly literature or empirical evidence to support arguments.
2. Each answers a specific question, most likely addressing an intellectual question. In the case of a research paper and a policy question in the case of the policy analysis.
3. Each has a logical structure from an introduction to a conclusion.
4. Each documents its sources to give intellectual credit and establish credibility.

likely differences:

1. Whereas research papers are generally written to a general audience of students, the policy analysis was written to a specific client.
2. Whereas research papers often take values as implicit, the policy analysis makes an explicit argument for construction of specific values (justice and ethical).
3. Whereas research papers often take an intellectual perspective, either for its own sake or to illustrate or to test some theory, the policy analysis looks back only to help it look forward. What does experience suggest about the likely impact of policy alternatives in the future?
4. Whereas research papers usually start with a general introduction that introduces, but does not immediately answer, the question being addressed, the policy analysis begins with an explicit statement that gives both the question and the answer (policy recommendation).
5. Whereas research papers often focus on some aspect of a question, the policy analysis tends to be comprehensive in the sense of considering the impacts of all the policy.
