Acknowledgments

Special thanks to the people who worked so hard in the preparation of this book. Barbara Chernow, Sandoval McNair, Bob Nicklind, and Bonnie Owen have continually put up with my passive voice, omission of words, and late night calls. You have been wonderful. Thanks to Cliff Gray, Tom Kernrick, and Dan McMillan for their precious time in reviewing proposals, individual chapters, and early drafts, along with their suggestions on the applicability of the material to their world.

There are also the people who have listened to me blather about this subject ad nauseum. They need credit for telling me when an idea was half-baked or I needed to be quiet and let someone else talk. This starts with Lori Comstock, Josef Pfister, Greg Sievers, and Tess Stewart, but must also include all the attendees of the PMIP Vancouver and Northwest Roundtables. All of you helped solidify my ideas and inspire me to write this book.

Acknowledgements would be incomplete without thanking the people I worked with while correcting too many problems on too many projects. This list includes Robert Gundersen, Paul Howe, Geoff Utland, Ted Urbanowicz, Kurt Wienecke, and many more. Without these people, I would be lacking the knowledge I have today. Thank you.

Thanks to Tammi, my beloved wife, for her encouragement while undertaking this project; to my children, Danielle, Jesse, and Garrett, for excusing dad while he was hopping around the world every time someone asked for help; and most recently, to my granddaughter Kennedy, who vied with various editors for my attention. Lastly, an extra thought to Jesse, my oldest son, who would have been proud of this accomplishment.
